The Danish group, the world's biggest container carrier, had announced a year ago it was reviewing its Greek operations, which include shipping lines, container terminals and dry-bulk terminal in Piraeus. However, on Wednesday, Maersk Line, the Greek unit that accounts for the bulk of the business, said it was cutting 18 out of 150 jobs, mostly within the company's administration, leaving just 13. "In light of the difficult operating environment, the company has decided to no longer operate in Greece," Maersk Line said in a statement. "The company has now decided to cut costs and eliminate the Greek unit." The Danish group will sell its shares in Maersk Line Greece to Piraeus Port Authority and one of its subsidiaries for a price not disclosed. Maersk Line Greece is 100 percent state-owned. "The conclusion of this transaction is subject to several conditions, including a loan agreement for the purchase of the shares," Maersk Line said. The company has already been in financial turmoil as global overcapacity and sluggish growth have squeezed demand for shipping. It was forced to float last year after a deal with creditors left it with no choice. On Wednesday, the shares in Maersk Line were down 0.5 percent at 4.71 euros. Many Greek businesses have been shut down for the last month after parliament blocked a referendum on the terms of a bailout that is aimed at keeping Greece in the euro zone. Possible liquidation of the Maersk Line Greece unit will increase uncertainty in the market for Greek shipping, with the sector having already been hit by news earlier this week that an affiliate of shipping giant Achilleas Porto, Greece's second-biggest port operator, was seeking financial assistance. Maersk Line Greece runs the container terminal in the Port of Piraeus, Greece's biggest. In December 2014, it
